Our experiments have led us to the discovery of serious theoretical and practical objections to the present judicial procedure. Under the judicial procedure it is practically impossible to judge questions of infringement or non-infringement of similar trade-marks consistently. Psychology can place at the disposal of the courts established facts, bearing on questions of confusion, such as have never been arrived at before in any reported case. Straightforward psychological methods can determine whether the mark complained of does actually cause confusion, what the exact amount of the confusion is, and how it compares with the extent of confusion between other litigated trade-marks. The present study proceeds from the conviction that in giving definite answers to these questions psychology can be of material assistance to the courts. About the Publisher Forgotten Books...
